"A blue collar poem that pays bittersweet tribute to a once-thriving steel town. A heartbreaking look at what industrialization wrought and globalization wrecked."

A few miles outside of Pittsburgh lies the town of Braddock, the last bastion of steel. Like many cities in the industrial heartland, Braddock has seen better days. Illuminated by images of days long gone and the haunting voices of its remaining inhabitants, Braddock America tells the story of a city hit hard by globalization. But behind the rusty façades, the community comes together as it tries to shape its future and reinvent itself in a post-industrial America.
