From the Co-Director of GREY GARDENS and THE NEW MEDICINE

"An engaging study of bedside manner, 'Making Rounds' demonstrates the real value of medicine with a human touch...showing just how vital listening is to the process."
-VILLAGE VOICE

"'Making Rounds' follows the disappearing art and science of how to listen, examine, and diagnose patients...highlighting the back-to-basics approach favored by two leading cardiologists." -UTNE READER

"Involving and illuminating!"
-EDGE MEDIA NETWORK

"Two old-time doctors are keeping the human touch alive, diagnosing patients with a refreshing lack of reliance on technology in this important, sweet-natured documentary."
-THIS WEEK IN NEW YORK

"A delightfully engrossing look at modern healthcare." -CRITERION CAST

We spend a trillion dollars a year on high-tech tests, and yet almost 20% of patients are misdiagnosed. 'Making Rounds' reintroduces the oldest diagnostic method – listening to the patient – by following two leading cardiologists from Mount Sinai Hospital, Dr. Valentin Fuster and Dr. Herschel Sklaroff, over a one-month period as they care for critically-ill heart patients in the Cardiac Care Unit at Mount Sinai Hospital. We accompany Fuster and Sklaroff as they teach future doctors the traditional art and science of a thorough bedside physical exam. "A great many diseases may be diagnosed," they tell us, "just by looking at a patient's hand."

'Making Rounds' presents Fuster's and Sklaroff's decades of experience in action as they correct misdiagnoses and save lives, demonstrating – in real-world situations - that simply observing and listening to patients remain medicine's most indispensable tools.
