"DELIGHTFUL AND CHARMING...MUCH TO ENJOY!"
- THE HOLLYWOOD REPORTER

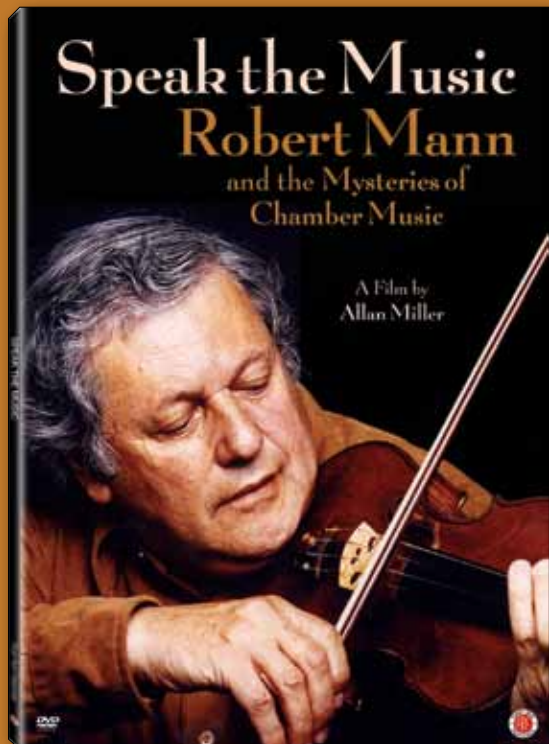

New York City, 1932. The country is in the throes of the Great Depression. The huge influx of Italian, Irish, and Jewish immigrants has led to unprecedented urban expansion. A photograph, 'Lunch atop a Skyscraper,' is taken during the construction of 30 Rockefeller Plaza. In it, eleven workmen are taking their lunch break while casually perched along a steel girder – boots dangling 850 feet above the sidewalk, Central Park and the misty Manhattan skyline stretching out behind them.

For 80 years, the identity of the eleven men – and the photographer that immortalized them – remained a mystery. But finally, the photograph is beginning to give up some of its secrets. Part homage and part detective story, Men at Lunch is the sublime tale of both an iconic American image, and the immigrant workers who built New York.

"A giant in music."

— Seiji Ozawa, Music Director, Boston Symphony Orchestra

"His influence on the musical community is a gift that cannot be measured. And he continues to inspire us"

— Itzhak Perlman, Violinist

Oscar-winning director Allan Miller gives us an intimate look at the musical life of Robert Mann, founding member and first violinist of the Juilliard String Quartet for 51 years and one of the most important and vital influences in chamber music in the 20th and 21st centuries. Rare footage of Juilliard String Quartet performances, Mann's renown coaching, and interviews with many of classical music's greatest performers document Mann's remarkable career as a chamber musician, teacher, and composer.
