When documentarian Ed Pincus, considered the father of first-person non-fiction film, is diagnosed with a terminal illness, he and collaborator Lucia Small team up to make one last film - much to the chagrin of Jane, Ed's wife of 50 years.

Told from both filmmakers' points of view, One Cut, One Life offers an intimacy rarely seen in documentaries, questioning whether some things might be too private to be made public. An intense, raw, yet often humorous exploration of the human condition, the film invites viewers to contemplate for themselves what is important, not only at the end of life, but also during.
